The first position on the defense to likely see a change is outside linebacker. With Jason Verrett (hamstring) and Danny Trevathan (knee) all expected to return to practice in the coming weeks, the two young and emerging players are likely to play significant roles on that side of the ball. And while the Chargers aren't likely to use a sixth starting safety until at least the second week of the season, outside linebackers like Will Blackmon, Jordan Poyer or T.J. McDonald are still likely to be in the mix for a starting job, or possibly the No. 2 cornerback job.. The idea is that you can do everything with the components you put in. There are a whole lot of companies that are making small form factor devices at a microprocessor level. Some of them actually work in a pretty compact manner, but they're only microprocessors and they're limited to 1MB of flash compared to 3MB of RAM, and we have to limit that so we can have the lowest possible memory. The Chargers also could look to upgrade at linebacker if injuries strike again, although I believe a strong performance by Melvin Ingram would help in an NFL-level role, although he's not expected to play at all in the middle of the Chargers' secondary this season.
